This short text can be used as press information:

If you're from Holland, you know..... the Jostiband. As the largest musical formation of people with intellectual disabilities, the group from Zwammerdam has been making music with great success for almost 60 years. The orchestra gives concerts in Holland and abroad and no one can put into words why and how the Jostiband manages to touch people's hearts and trigger so much enthusiasm and so many emotions.

The secret of the Jostiband remains a mystery. As the largest musical formation of people with intellectual disabilities, the group from Zwammerdam has been making music with great success for almost 57 years. The orchestra gives concerts, performs in Holland and abroad and no one can put into words why and how the Jostiband manages to touch people's hearts and trigger so much enthusiasm and so many emotions.

Despite their limitations, the members of the orchestra make music full of fire and never fail to stun their audience with wonder and admiration. Adding to this, is the effect their music has on the audience when they perform and the connection their music makes. The Jostiband consists of about 100 people with intellectual disabilities making music. Over 80 members live on the premises, in one of the various care units of Ipse de Bruggen, a multi-faceted organization in South Holland that provides care, support, treatment and guidance to people with a mental or multiple disability. The other members live with their parents at home or in other housing arrangements in the province of South Holland. The orchestra is conducted by Lyan Verburg.
